Stay in the know In today's world, staying in the know is hard. For example, you know you're spending too much time on the net, but you don't know how you can spend less time. You know you have to work out, but you don't have the time. You know you need to get organized, but you don't have the time. You know you need to eat healthier, but you don't have the time. You know you need to spend time with your family and friends, but you don't have the time. And then you hear about 8hands, a web service that gives you real time notifications of all your accounts in one place. ... of managing so many services at the same time. A big screen with icons of all my services will be displayed to me every time I log in to a different service. I can open any of the icons with a shortcut key and go to the main screen for the service directly. This shortcut feature is integrated into most clients and services. For example, if I open Chrome and type a URL directly, a shortcut for that URL will be displayed, along with a shortcut for one of my accounts. This way, I don't have to open the browser and then switch to a specific service. This feature is integrated into most clients and services, so if you run a service on the server, you can provide the same feature to your clients. When I log in to any of my services, if there are no new updates in my accounts, I don't have to go to them. Instead, I'm automatically shown the last activity I performed in that service in real time. If a new activity is available, I'm immediately sent a notification on my desktop to my email address, along with a link to the activity. My desktop is always in the center of my screen and my backlight is always at full brightness. In fact, I've been using this feature in Windows for over a year now. The only way I can use my computer while I'm sleeping is because of it. You can visit the 8hands website for more information. ...of managing so many services at the same time.
